

CLINTON SAVINGS BANK HOSTS TAHANTO REGIONAL MIDDLE SCHOOL STUDENTS

National Job Shadow Day Gives Students Behind the Scenes Look at Banking

CLINTON, Mass. – February 11, 2009 – Clinton Savings Bank hosted nearly 20 students from Tahanto Regional Middle School of Boylston, Mass. in honor of National Job Shadow Day, a yearlong effort to enrich the lives of students by acquainting them with the working world through on-the-job experiences. On February 5, several bank executives discussed their job functions and demonstrated some everyday tasks. Students were also able to see much of the behind-the-scenes action, including a tour of the bank vault, teller area and executive offices.

“During the last four years, we’ve been proud to participate in Job Shadow Day,” said Robert Paulhus, President and CEO of Clinton Savings Bank. “The opportunity to show these eager students how banking works and what our team does to support our customers and the community is a great way are always eager to learn about banking. That is information that can help them no matter what career path they follow, since they’ll be dealing with a bank as a business owner or for their own personal finances.”

Starting each Groundhog Day and continuing through the school year, the year long National Job Shadow Day initiative is intended to help young people understand how what they learn in the classroom leads to success in the workplace later on in life. More than 100,000 businesses participate in National Job Shadow Day nationwide every year and educators are pleased with the ongoing involvement of the private sector. It is a coordinated effort of Junior Achievement, America’s Promise - The Alliance for Youth, the U.S. Department of Education and the U.S. Department of Labor. National partners include the Society for Human Resource Management (SHRM) and the Association for Career and Technical Education (ACTE).
